the same, viz., that there has been "a change of view" to be by its advocates, it is on grounds of expediency that the decision must be based. The one proceeds, however, in support of the advocates of a change; the monopoly has all the advantages of possession, a great thing amongst a people averse to change, and it only remains to be shown for its effects upon the people of India; on the other hand, the superior advantages of a new scheme must be clearly and simply demonstrated before it can be adopted, and it must be so much better than the existing system as to justify the Government in incurring the risk of a change, and making a radical reform in a long established institution.)

Her Majesty has been graciously pleased to confer a Companionship of the Bath upon Mr. C. Rivers Wilson, for his distinguished services at the Treasury and also as Comptroller-General in the National Debt Office.
